

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation.

Sinclairs dominance over free media are a prime example of what is normally called "state biased television" in other countries. The difference in this case is that it is quit literally corporate biased television. The opinions expressed in the media should be that of the reporters and news broadcasters not of objectiveless unethical corporate leaders. This is at least what the law pretends to inforce.
